A STROLL THROUGH AN OLD GRAVEYARD

(2 of 4 pages)

Just a few blocks from the Old Charleston Jailyard, now the American College of the Building Arts, where the stonemasonry and stonecarving workshops (pp. 63-67) took place last November is the Unitarian Church (established 1780) and its cemetery. Not surprisingly several of the stone carvers gravitated there and one of them, Pete Bracken, took several photographs. Probably others did too, but he sent his to me. Thanks, Pete, for the opportunity to show these fine examples of the craft.
