Photographs by Greg Reiche,
an artist from Santa Fe, New Mexico who recently travelled to Peru.

Greg had but a single day at Machu Picchu, but it was a fortuitous day. In the early afternoon a rapidly approaching Andean rainstorm sent visitors scurrying for the exits. Drawn by the dramatic light, Greg lagged behind and, armed only with his smartphone, took several of the photos you see here and the one on the back cover. Greg's good fortune is ours as well; these photos may lack the precise character a better camera would have given, but the way they have been composed, combined with the prevailing atmospheric effects, produced some excellent images.
